The Washington Post*, an article by Garry Lee (2000):

“My tour of the place was a journey through contemporary Russian literary history. Zislin gave short biographical speeches about each of the poets, pointed out letters they wrote or letters written to them. He waved his hand over hundreds of books by and about the poets and pointed out portraits or photographs of each...”

Washington City Paper*, an article by Joe Dempsey (2005):

“When hosting Americans, he always starts with a song about snow, he says, because “in Russia, winter is much more lengthy than here, so it’s much more significant.”
